Wireless Transmitter Fires a Mine at Distance of Thirty-five Miles and Rings Bells. Copyright, 1920, by the Press Publishing Co. (The New York Evening World).

LONDON, Jan. 17.

N interesting demonstration of some remarkable wireless develop-A ments was given at the Marconi headquarters at Chelmsford Thursday. A device which makes it possible for ships in distress to ring alarm bells on vessels 300 miles or more away was first shown. This was described in wireless despatches. But an even more convincing demonstration of the power of wireless telegraphy was given when a small mine of guapowder was exploded. At a given signal, Cambridge actuated an automatic transmitter, and almost immediately afterward

the charge was fired at Chelmaford. (The distance is thirty-five miles.) A member of the Marconi Company pointed out that there would be no difficulty in firing a gun from a spot 300 miles away. All the big guns used in the Passchendaele offensive could have been fired as easity from London as from Ypres. Paris could cause an explosion in Berlin by merely pressing a key. An airplane could wait until advancing enemy troops had reached a certain spot and then explode a mine which would annihilate them.

When the range of the instrument has been increased it would be a comparatively simple matter for a man sitting in an easy chair in London to cause an explosion in New York. All that would be necessary would be to leave in New York a receiver suitably hidden and connected with a mine.
